

No. 9-10 Anno II.

ZAGREB, 27 FEBBRAIO 1942.

La riproduzione è permessa soltanto con la citazione dell'origine e invio di un esemplare

SOMMARIO:

Il mondo islamico croato. — L'arte rurale e l'operosità casalinga in Croazia. — Primi inizi della cinematografia croata. — L'attività del Teatro di stato croato. — Il centenario della «Matica Hrvatska». — Un esempio della Croazia bosniaca. — Dalla Croazia. — Politica. Economia. — Cultura. — Varie.

IL MONDO ISLAMICO CROATO

H. SABANOVIC

I croati vennero a contatto col mondo islamico già nel corso del VII secolo. Questa prima conoscenza avvenne attraverso i mercanti di schiavi bizantini. Molto interessante è il fatto che gli arabi e i croati siano stati nel passato spesse volte reciprocamente collegati e costretti a combattere insieme contro il comune nemico, Bisanzio. In pari tempo, quando gli arabi ebbero occupato la Siria e la Palestina (635—637), i croati, debellati gli avari, occuparono la Dalmazia. Il traffico tra la Siria e la Dalmazia era già prima vivace. L'opposizione politica e religiosa contro Costantinopoli era forte tanto in Siria quanto in Dalmazia: i legami politici degli arabi e dei croati ebbero spesso buon successo, come emerge dalle vicende della guerra comune e dall'assedio di Costantinopoli nell'anno 677, e come risulta dall'efficace appoggio prestato ai croati dagli arabi in occasione della sollevazione contro Bisanzio negli anni 802—811.

Nelle relazioni dei mercanti arabi nel corso del secolo VIII si fa cenno dei croati, ma non si può discernere se si trattò di croati d'oltre i Carpazi oppure dei croati del Litorale. Più frequenti e precise sono le relazioni che ci pervengono dai tempi successivi all'occupazione della Sicilia e dell'Italia meridionale da parte degli arabi. Da quell'epoca Palermo divenne un punto importante per il commercio tra la Croazia e la Spagna. Le vecchie relazioni e i vincoli dei croati col mondo islamita derivavano da avventurosi stimoli di numerosi noti e ignoti croati, che si spingevano per stimolo di curiosità per le terre lontane, nell'interno dell'Oriente, dove alcuni acquistarono in certe regioni delle Indie titolo di principi (melik), come lo dimostra il caso di Jaša il Raguseo, che mille anni fa si stabilì in India, conseguendo il titolo di principe. D'altra parte poi il primo contatto dei croati col mondo musulmano avvenne per mezzo dei rapporti commerciali internazionali, oppure in seguito alle lotte per il predominio sul mare. Così, per esempio, è noto che l'offensiva degli aglabidi africani (800—809) contro Bisanzio nella Sicilia e nell'Italia meridionale spinse i pirati arabi sino alla sponda dell'Adriatico, dove le incursioni delle forze marittime arabe erano assai frequenti e dove si svolsero aspri combattimenti, ai quali partecipò anche la flotta croata (870). Le lotte cessarono sotto il governo dell'imperatore Lodovico II nell'anno 871, ma le relazioni commerciali si mantennero perché le città maritime, innanzi tutto Venezia e i commercianti longobardi di Bari, e successivamente anche i siciliani e i catalani si occupavano del commercio degli schiavi dalla Dalmazia. Tale commercio era così lucrativo che tutti i divieti non valsero a nulla. Perciò il glorioso re croato Zvonimir, in occasione dell'incoronazione nell'anno 1076, dovette assumersi l'impegno verso il papa Gregorio VII di impedire tale commercio. I divieti si resero necessari anche nel secolo XIV e XV a Spalato, Curzola, Dubrovnik.

V. Mažuranić, ritenne croati i sacalibi, che dal IX al XII secolo si ricordano nell'Africa meridionale e specialmente in Spagna. Un gran numero di questi croati, spediti dalla Dalmazia in Africa e in Spagna, si distinse in seguito in riguardevoli posizioni e anche alla corte dei califfi di Cordova, e in generale nella vita pubblica della Spagna islamita. I califfi di Cordova avevano spesse volte, non soltanto la propria guardia del corpo composta da sacalibi, ma, v'erano a Cordova dei generali, architetti, poeti e scrittori sacalibi. È noto che il re sacalibo (croato) «di Gebalim» era in diretta relazione diplomatica col più celebre califfo spagnuolo, Abdurrahman III. Dalle su esposte circostanze si può considerare con ragione il «re di Gebalim», secondo Mažuranić, quale croato.

Nel mondo scientifico l'influenza dei croati sull'impero arabo di Spagna, specialmente all'epoca del culmine della forza e potenza dell'impero è ben nota: l'influenza croata si estendeva su tutta la vita pubblica.

Tale influenza dei croati sulla vita politica, e in generale sulla vita pubblica della Spagna maomettana provocò presso i nobili arabi e presso i potenti berberi un senso di risentimento, per cui vennero mosse delle accuse e degli attacchi contro i croati, per menomare almeno in parte la loro influenza alla Corte. Ma i croati avevano anche in Spagna dei valenti scrittori che con loro penna prendevano la difesa dei propri compatriotti. Soltanto così si può spiegare la genesi della famosa opera del poeta croato Habib dal titolo »Il libro delle vittorie e delle prove per coloro che non conoscono belle doti dei croati«. Con questa sua opera Habib assunse la difesa dei propri connazionali influenti e potenti contro gli attacchi dei berberi e degli arabi. Avendo Habib composto la sua opera sulla base delle canzoni e degli annali dei suoi compatriotti, da ciò si può dedurre che nella Spagna islamitica v'erano molti altri croati che si occupavano di letteratura. L'opera di Habib è andata disgraziatamente smarrita e ciò costituisce un gran danno per questa parte della storia croata.

Ancor più caratteristica è l'influenza dei croati sullo sviluppo politico dell'Impero turco. Esistevano intere pleiadi di celebri croati, per lo più della Croazia bosniaca ed erzegovinese, che in diverse epoche della storia turca coprirono cariche importanti presso la Porta. Per i meriti del pascià croato Mahmut, che occupò la Bosnia e l'Erzegovina e che fu il primo dei croati a raggiungere il grado di gran visir, dunque la più alta carica nel potente impero turco, i croati coprirono per due interi secoli importanti posizioni presso la corte turca. La sola carica di gran visir fu coperta da ventiquattro generali di sangue e origine croata. Secondo il giudizio di alcuni storiografi turchi, diversi visir croati vengono considerati come colonne del potente impero d'allora. All'epoca più splendida della storia turca, al tempo di Solimano il Grande (1494-1566) nove croati coprirono la carica di gran visir. Mentre gli uni si distinsero come valenti militari e uomini di stato, gli altri si notarono come eccellenti amministratori delle finanze dello stato ottomano.

Alla Sublime Porta la lingua croata era coltivata come seconda lingua ufficiale, dato che molti sultani parlavano il croato. È accertato che Maometto II e Solimano il Grande parlavano il croato. Tutt'e due i sultani avevano alla corte tra i migliori e più devoti magistrati e collaboratori molti croati. Ibrahim-pascià da Požega era il prediletto e il migliore collaboratore di Solimano il Grande, a cui quest'ultimo deve una gran parte della sua gloria. Egli occupò Bagdad e Tbris e assediò Vienna e Kisek. Era tanto potente che si faceva chiamare sultano. Interessante ma nello stesso tempo anche infausto è il suo incontro, o meglio scontro con un altro glorioso figlio della stirpe croata, Nikola Jurišić, il difensore di Kisek. I due valorosi eroi, dello stesso sangue e della stessa lingua, al servizio di padroni stranieri, si scontrarono come avversari sul campo di battaglia. Il prof. Vjekoslav Klačić, nella sua »Povijest Hrvata« (Storia dei Croati) descrisse sino ad un certo punto l'incontro dei due eroi.

È un fatto storico che i nomi di Mehmed-pascià Sokolović, quale uno dei più grandi statisti turchi, del croato Rustem-pascià, quale ultimo rigeneratore dell'Impero turco e di Ibrahim-pascià di Novošeherli, il cui carattere e le cui doti diplomatiche furono innalzati dagli storiografi turchi sino alle stelle — nella storia dei turchi stanno come colonne sulle quali a suo tempo posava il più potente impero turco. Attraverso questi ed altri grandi uomini l'Oriente ha conosciuto la nazione croata come nazione umana, coraggiosa, intelligente e accorta, dotata di tutte quelle qualità positive che distinguono un popolo.

'ARTE RURALE E L'OPEROSITÀ CASALINGA IN CROAZIA

Ancora oggi nell'Europa sud-orientale si conserva l'arte rurale come parte integrale della cultura nazionale. In queste regioni l'arte rurale non si limita alla semplice cornice decorativa della vita rurale, ma è la sua parte integrale e la sua espressione spirituale. L'arte rurale non è un fenomeno separato, ma è strettamente legata con tutta la giuntura delle sue caratteristiche tradizionali, come del resto si manifesta nei costumi, negli usi, nel lavoro e negli attrezzi. Soltanto noi consideriamo l'arte rurale quale espressione della vita collettiva del contadino, possiamo renderci conto del suo significato e del suo valore. E fin quando queste condizioni vitali esisteranno, non cesserà l'espressione artistica del contadino.

In genere l'integrità delle manifestazioni vitali del villaggio può mantenersi soltanto allora, quando tutti elementi di tali manifestazioni siano conservati inalterati.

Se si scuote, sotto l'influsso di fattori esterni, anche uno solo degli elementi della vita del contadino, si rovescia tutto il suo equilibrio.

Da questo processo non si è potuto liberare neppure la Croazia, però ugualmente, col sopraggiungere delle circostanze, la vita tradizionale è rimasta ancora in molte regioni quasi intatta. E in queste regioni, particolarmente nella Zagora dalmata, nella Bosnia, nella Posavina e nella Podravina si osserva assai bene la compattezza della vita del contadino croato. Pertanto nelle regioni in cui l'infiltrazione della civiltà cittadina, specie dell'industria, è avvenuta con ritmo accelerato, la vita armoniosa e tradizionale del paese appare già scossa. Ma neppure le regioni isolate non si sono potute tenere del tutto lontane dagli elementi stranieri, tanto più perché appunto tali regioni sono soverchiamente povere, e dipendono, quindi, dall'industria cittadina.

Mentre il villaggio viveva chiuso nella sua sfera vitale, economica e culturale, gli oggetti del suo lavoro artistico furono nel tempo stesso anche oggetti delle proprie necessità quotidiane (costume, ceramica, incisione, ecc.). La distribuzione del lavoro presso le case padronali primitive rese possibile al contadino di dedicare a tali oggetti la più grande attenzione, e creare da essi oggetti d'arte che coi loro ricchi ornamenti e la

LA VIE THEATRALE A PALERME

Aucun souvenir ni aucun document nous prouve l'existence d'un théâtre romain à Palerme; un au contraire, en existait dans le village voisin de Imera, et il avait la forme classique d'un amphithéâtre.

Au Moyen Age, Palerme, qui fut un centre politique et culturel très important, put connaître les bouffons, les mimes, ~~et~~ les "ioculatores" et leurs expositions, de même que toutes les autres villes de l'époque.

Ces expositions s'ennoblirent et atteignirent un niveau artistique très élevé dans les sumptueuses cours normandes et souabienes.

Mr. Debartolomeis avec beaucoup d'intelligence a étudié le caractère dramatique et représentatif du célèbre Ciullo d'Alcamo, un des premiers monuments de la littérature italienne.

Mr Ugo Falcando, qui écrivit sur les faits de Sicile dont il fut témoin du II54 au II69, M. Pietro da Eboli dans sa chronique et beaucoup d'autres auteurs nous ont assurés qu'en face du Palais Royal il existait une "Salle Verte" ou teatrum imperiali palacii qui était destiné aux spectacles publics. Le voyageur arabe, Abd er Rahman déclarait que "le théâtre resplendit sur toutes les œuvres d'architecture" et un autre arabe Ibn el Giubbair, qui fut en Sicile en II84, s'exprimait en des termes pleins d'admiration pour sa grandeur et sa beauté. Cette Salle toutefois n'existe plus au XV siècle.

Dans les siècles suivants nous avons des nouvelles au sujet de farces, de laudes, de représentations religieuses, etc. Mais avant qu'on puisse parler d'une véritable représentation, il faut arriver au I538; ~~mais~~ en cette année en effet, dans l'église de Sainte Marie de la Pinta, et sur ordre du Vice Roi Ferrante Gonzaga, ~~un~~ un spectacle fut donné "Représentation de la Crédit et le Verbe Incarné" qui fut même appelée l'Acte de la Pinta.

Cette œuvre fut composée par le célèbre écrivain bénédictin Teofilo Folengo, qui en I537 fut envoyé par punition au Monastère de San Martino delle Scale près de Palerme, à cause de son ouvrage, les célèbres "maccaronee", pas du tout orthodoxe, paru sous le pseudonyme de Merlin Cocai.

Pour se rattrapper sous le point de vue spirituel, il avait composé un poème long et ennuyeux de quarante huit chants sous le titre "La Palermitaine", c'est à dire "L'Acte de la Pinta fut tiré de ce poème, et la prose s'alterne à la musique dans un ensemble chorégraphique luxueux. Le moine bénédictin fut l'auteur du commentaire musical.

Cette représentation fut donnée plusieurs fois, ~~et~~ avec un éclat et une richesse de scènes toujours plus grande jusqu'à l'année I60I, et les chronistes de l'époque en parlent avec admiration. Il faut se rappeler qu'en ces temps là le rideau ne se levait pas, mais au contraire il était abaissé jusqu'à terre, tradition celle-ci que jusqu'aujourd'hui existe dans les principales églises de Palerme lors des cérémonies religieuses du Samedi Saint avec la fameuse "calata da tira" au moment du "gloria".

Les premières comédies profanes furent données dans l'église de S. Nicoldò en I545 à l'occasion du mariage du fils du Vice Roi Gonzaga (il avait tout juste neuf ans) avec la dame Diana Cardone, mariage déclaré nul par l'Archevêque de Milan à cause de l'âge de l'époux.

Ces représentations, à l'église, dans les places où dans les palais, furent très fréquentes à partir de cette époque, et toujours pour des fêtes, des mariages et des célébrations.

Un incident assez bruyant dérangea une de ces récitations au mois de février I578 dans la maison du Capitaine de Justice don Vincenzo Buongiorno. La comédie était si polissonne et elle était représentée avec si peu de tenue, que à un certain moment le Vice Roi ~~abandonna~~ quitta la salle avec sa femme et toute sa cour. Le lendemain les artistes, qui étaient des comiques génois étaient mis au ban par ordre du Vice Roi.

Drôle de pudeur en un homme qui avait organisé le spectacle indigne des courses entre ~~des~~ femmes des rues et qui avait créé tellement de scandales à cause des amours avec la baronne de Miselandino !

Après Ferrare, Mantoue, Venise et Rome, Palerme fut une des premières villes qui purent avoir un théâtre permanent. Il fut bâti par le Sénat Palermite, sous le Vice Roi Colonna dans l'ancienne église de Sainte Marie du Spasme, ainsi surnommée parce qu'on y adorait le célèbre tableau de Raphael qui se trouve aujourd'hui au Musée du Prado. L'Eglise du Spasme fut transformée en théâtre (pour les représentations tragiques et comiques qu'il fallait faire selon les occasions et les temps) aussitôt que les moines de l'Uliviers furent transférés à l'Eglise de Ste Ursule, aujourd'hui cimetière de Ste Ursule.

Cette salle de spectacle fut inaugurée le 22 février I582 avec le "Fou sage" de Antonio Usodimare. En même temps les Jesuites faisaient représenter dans leur collège les drames religieux à et les Philippins faisaient connaître leur "Oratoire". D'autres théâtre provisoires naquirent un peu partout et en 1554 un mélodrame fut représenté pour la première fois à Palerme, le "Serse" de P.F. Cavalli. Le premier théâtre dans le sens moderne du mot put naître en 1682 sur l'initiative de l'Union des Musiciens, et ce fut le théâtre de Ste Cécile. Il contenait soixante sept loges divisées en quatre rangées et une salle de trois cent places. Il fut inaugurée le 28 octobre 1693 avec le mélodrame religieux "L'innocence pénitente, c'est à dire Sainte Rosalie", vers de Mr le dr. Vincenzo Giattini et Musique de Ignazio Pollice, tous les deux de Palerme. Avec l'inauguration du théâtre de Ste Cécile l'opéra musicale à Palerme eût une période de grande prospérité. Au commencement l'on représentait presque exclusivement des pièces de musiciens siciliens, tels que Astorga (Augusta 1860), Madrid 1757, Alessandro Scarlatti (Palermo 1659-Napoli 1725) et bien d'autres. Ensuite le répertoire aussi le mélodrame italien pré et post métastasien et même l'opéra comique napolitaine. En 1726, dans la place Ste Cathérine, dans un magasin du Palais de Valguarnera de Sainte Lucie (qui auparavant avait été utilisé comme théâtre populaire, dit des Travaglini) un autre théâtre fut construit, et il fut appelé de Ste Lucie et de Ste Cathérine. Le tremblement de terre de la même année endommagea le théâtre en construction et le "Ste Cécile" en les réduisant à néant, et, dans l'attente des réparations, un théâtre d'été fut construit tout le long de la plage. Le théâtre de Ste Cécile, rendu plus moderne et enrichi, fut ouvert au public à nouveau en 1737. Le "Ste Lucie" était en état cinq années après. Une furieuse concurrence se déchainait ainsi entre ces deux théâtres, et à ce sujet pouvons-nous lire des chroniques assez piquantes dans les journaux de l'époque. Les deux théâtres vers la fin du siècle étaient encore une fois rendus plus jolis et agrandis: et en cette occasion dans le "Ste Cécile" on enleva les grillages en bois (tel que dans les fenêtres des couvents) qui fermaient à moitié les loges face aux spectateurs, et qui permettaient aux dames de ... faire ce qu'il leur plasait. Dans la partie supérieure de la loge qui était sans grillages on voyait un peu partout des plumes rouges et vertes. Appartenaient-elles au petit chapeau d'une jeune fille ingénue que la mère très jalouse gardait, ou au chapeau d'une dame langoureuse qui appréciait de ces grillages pour continuer... au théâtre son roman avec son cicisbée? Malgré la préférence du public pour les spectacles musicaux et malgré le grand triomphe du mélodrame, l'art dramatique continua à s'imposer. La Comédie de l'Art avec ses comiques et ses masques fit son apparition à Palerme, et la comédie tragique fut très populaire surtout à cause de Pietro Mancuso, auteur très riche. Pendant tout le XVIII Siècle on a des nouvelles au sujet de nombreuses troupes de prose qui étaient venues à Palerme pour faire des représentations. En 1808 le théâtre Ste Lucie fut complètement reconstruit sous le nom de St Carolino, en l'honneur de la Reine Maria Carolina, et il existe encore aujourd'hui sous le nom de Théâtre Bellini. D'autres petits théâtres surgirent aussi en cette période, par exemple le "Santa Anna" dans un magasin de l'autre Palais Valguarnera, actuellement Palais Gangi, le "San Ferdinando", ensuite appelé "Humbert" dans la Rue Merlo, le "Loreto" en face à Villa Giulia, et bien d'autres encore. Le "San Ferdinando" fut construit express pour recevoir la Troupe des "Vastasate" (des choses vulgaires) qui avait été formée en 1786 par Biagio Perez avec des gens du peuple. Giuseppe Marotta en fut l'acteur principal, et il créa le masque de Nofrio. Pendant tout le XIX Siècle, le "Pasquino", prit la place de "Nofrio", masque typiquement palermite, et il fut interprété successivement par différents artistes; Salvatore Tomasino, qui représentait dans le "Ste Anne" fut le dernier. Dans la deuxième moitié du XIX Siècle, et même au XX siècle, Palerme, eut, dans le cadre de la vie artistique italienne, une activité importante en ce qui concerne le théâtre. Les anciens théâtres furent à la longue insuffisants soit du point de vue de la scène, soit par le fait qu'ils devaient accueillir le public d'une ville qui s'agrandissait toujours davantage. Le grand Théâtre Politeama fut créé en 1874, dans un style pompeien classique, et sur dessin de l'Architecte Palermitain, Giuseppe Damiani Almejra, et peu après on commença la construction du Théâtre Massimo, peut être le plus grand et le plus beau d'Europe, oeuvre de l'architecte palermitain G.B. Basile qui gagna le concours international ~~organisé par~~ la Commune de Palerme.

Le Théâtre Biondo fut créé en 1903 (arch. N. Mineo) et il a été inauguré par Ermete Novelli. Dans ce même théâtre ~~en~~ la Gioconda de Gabriele d'Annunzio eût sa première représentation. Le Théâtre Nazionale fut créé en 1914, le Finocchiaro en 1920, et ~~en plus de tous ceux-là~~ il faut mentionner d'autres et nombreuses salles cinématographiques, parmi lesquelles le Diana, récemment remis à neuf et qui reçoit aussi des troupes dramatiques.

Les nombreux dégâts dont furent victimes nos Théâtres, à la suite des bombardements ont été immédiatement réparés grâce à l'esprit d'initiative et au courage de certains privés. Et, malgré toutes les plaies dont souffre encore notre ville meurtrie, la vie théâtrale a repris à Palerme sa vie, en suivant ainsi les glorieuses traditions dont on a si brièvement parlé dans cette étude.

/ tout le reste,

Le Théâtre Populaire eût fin

(1) (Sant'Anna) avec lui et avec les "maiusi" de la Vicaria (du Vicariat) de Giuseppe Rizzuto, pièce representative du Théâtre Réaliste, ~~de l'humour et de l'ironie~~

(2) "Vasta sate" vient de "vastaco" qui en dialecte palermitain signifie "porteur", "débardeur", "homme du peuple". Des acteurs étaient nient nient de ce milieu.

When one enters the Cappella Pa. latina (Palatine Chapel) one is suddenly charmed as if before a surprising thing of which one feels the power before having understood it.

GUY DE MAUPASSANT, Wandering Life

ITINERARY]]

(S. Giuseppe⁽¹⁾, Piazza Bologni⁽²⁾, Cattedrale⁽³⁾, Museo Diocesano⁽⁴⁾, Palazzo Sclafani⁽⁵⁾, Palazzo Reale⁽⁶⁾, Cappella Palatina⁽⁷⁾, S. Giovanni degli Eremiti⁽⁸⁾).

Beginning from the Quattro Canti and cutting Victor Emmanuel Street in a direction opposite to the sea, in the short way as far as Porta Nuova, we see monuments of great interest.

In the first place the Church of St. Joseph of the Cheatinis which has two entrances: one in Magna St. and the other in Victor Emmanuel St. This baroque building at Latin cross, with three naves divided by fourteen monolithic marble columns by Billiemi is rich in gilt stuccoes and frescoes due to Philip Brancredi of Messina

1. St. Joseph Church.
2. Bologni Square.
3. Cathedral.
4. Diocesan Museum.
5. Sclafani Palace.
6. Royal Palace.
7. Palatine Chapel.
8. St John of the Hermits.

Let the Cathedral has before it a large 1 94 representing episodes of the life of St. Cajetan 20 ~~which have gone lost owing to the air-raids of 1942~~ and the tourist must not neglect to see the S. Gaetano in adorazione (St. Cajetan in worship) by Peter Novelli ~~when it will be restored to its old place; the wooden~~ ~~Crucifix attributed to friar~~ Umile Pintorno in ~~the right~~ chapel on the right, and at last the large crypt under the Church where a Madonna della Provvidenza (Our Lady of the Providence) is worshipped: this place inspires a religious meditation and is much frequented by the believers on Wednesdays.

Continuing our walk along Victor Emmanuel St. we meet the Piazza Bologna (Bologna Square) whose austere aspect, due above all to the palaces Villa franca and Riso, has been changed by the war.
The statue of Charles V, a work by Scipione Li Volpi, that always succeeded, in times of revolution, in escaping destruction, was particularly in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries the place preferred

Let the Cathedral has before it a large 172

for exposing bills containing lampoons and (21 satires against the Government or powerful people: anonymous complaints, often hung during the night, to the neck of the slender figure of the Emperor, to indicate a state of mind diffused in the population in the only way of protest, possible in those times. It is in the Palazzo Villafranca (Villafranca Palace) that Garibaldi took some hours' rest in the same day when he entered Palermo after overcoming by surprise the resistance of the enemy. At the bottom of the square is Via S. Chiara (St. Chiara Street). Entering it you see at No. 2 the Palazzo Raffadali o Speciale (Palace Raffadali or Speciale).

Going again along Victor Emmanuel St. you meet
S. Salvatore (The Saviour Church) a Norman Church since many years closed to the public to make repairs. Almost in front of this Church is the ancient Collegio dei Gesuiti (The Jesuits College) now the seat of the Biblioteca Na-zionale (National Library). The large reading-hall on the first floor has been heavily struck by the bombs and books of considerable value have

But the Cathedral has before it a large 23

been buried under the ruins; they are being recovered by degrees. The work of the library goes on, on the ground-floor: the entrance is on the side of Via delle Scuole. In 1812 the Sicilian Barons met together in the ancient College of the Jesuits and solemnly voted the end of their privileges. The bibliographic Superintendent and Director of the Library is Dr. Giraldi.

Near the entrance of the library on May 29th 1860, trying to oppose the sally of the Bourbons me soldiers out of the Royal Palace, two physicians, two brothers, Pascal and Saverio Di Benedetto fell dead in the generous attempt ~~to~~ of building up a barricade. Their family deserved the comparison with Cairoli. Seven years later the eldest brother fell heroically in the campaign of the Agro Romano, in the desperate attempt of delivering Rome.

And now we are in the large rectangular Piazza della Cattedrale (Cathedral Square) surrounded by a marble balustrade on which is a row of saints. Within the enclosure there are flowerbeds, but, unhappily, they are little cared of.

23

Yet the Cathedral has before it a large square and its bulk is imposing even at a distance. ~~In~~ ^{remote} times there were here monuments sacred to worship. There was at first a Christian Basilica, which in the IX century when they first conquered the Island, the Arabians changed into a Mosque. The ancient Mosque was afterwards transformed into a Catholic Temple by the Norman Kings. Gualtiero Offamilio (Walter of the Mill), Archbishop of Palermo was its founder in 1185; now he sleeps his everlasting sleep in a sepulchre of the crypt.

But what discordancy in the great constructive whole! The ancient Norman building that ~~par~~ took both of the Church and of a fortress together, has lost its originality owing to later changes and additional works, above all between 1781 and 1801 due to the Florentine Ferdinand Guga, so that now of the Cathedral of Offamilio only remain the apses with the corresponding steeples and a part of the walls of the nave. Every century added or modified something to the ancient monument; but, if in many cases this ~~addition~~ improved the whole, the same cannot be said of ~~tomb~~ ^{Constance} of Aragon, wife to Frederick II; she

27

the works executed by Tuga, sometimes quite ~~vandalic~~ work. He transformed the task he has been charged to provide for some urgent repairs into that of a renovator of the whole building. And what an unhappy renovator!
To him is due the transverse nave, to him the dome of the XVII century, to him the heavy and unpleasant battlements, and, at last, to him is due the dispersion of the decorations, once magnificent, as is seen on looking at some remains of the great Tribune, a work by Antonello Gagini.

A witness of the Saracen period is a Kufic inscription in one of the columns of the Southern porch. It is taken out of the Sura VII, v. 55 and runs as follows: Our Lord created the day followed by the night; the moon and the stars are at his command. Is it not true that he has created these things? Is it not true that he is the Master? O God be blessed, Lord of the centuries.

The inside of the Cathedral seems squalid compared with the richness and no-

^{tomb} Constance of Aragon, wife to Frederick II; she died in 1222 and by her feet was for many 26

numental appearance of the outside. The tourist must not forget to visit the treasure, the crypt and the royal tombs; these last are the greatest attraction of the Cathedral.

The treasure contains the most precious objects discovered in the royal tombs. Above all the tourist must fix his attention on the crown of Constance of Aragon and on a precious Spanish altar-frontal.

The crypt is damp, dark, and, unhappily, ill-kept. Its entrance is not easy. Under its cross-vaulting, along two naves there are about ten sarcophagi mostly occupied by Archbishops of Palermo. Among them the sarcophagus of the founder of the Church: Walter Offamilio. The figure lying on the sixth sarcophagus and representing the Archbishop John Paternò is attributed to Antonello Gagini. The royal tombs are six; they are situated in two chapels enclosed with railings just at the beginning of the right nave. Four of them are under canopies, two are set in the wall. In the wall is the tomb of Constance of Aragon, wife to Frederick II; she died in 1222 and by her feet was for many

26

numental appearance of the outside. The tourist must not forget to visit the treasure, the crypt and the royal tombs; these last are the greatest attraction of the Cathedral.

The treasure contains the most precious objects discovered in the royal tombs. Above all the tourist must fix his attention on the crown of Constance of Aragon and on a precious Spanish altar-frontal.

The crypt is damp, dark, and, unhappily, ill-kept. Its entrance is not easy. Under its cross-vaulting, along two naves there are about ten sarcophagi mostly occupied by Archbishops of Palermo. Among them the sarcophagus of the founder of the Church: Walter Offamilio. The figure lying on the sixth sarcophagus and representing the Archbishop John Paterno is attributed to Antonello Gagini. The royal tombs are six; they are situated in two chapels enclosed with railings just at the beginning of the right nave. Four of them are under canopies, two are set in the wall. In the wall is the tomb of Constance of Aragon, wife to Frederick II; she died in 1222 and by her feet was for many centuries a wooden box containing the imperial crown that is kept now in the treasure of the Church. The tomb of Duke Guglielmo, son of Frederick II of Aragon is also in the wall. Under rich canopies supported by pillars streaked with mosaics are the tombs of King Ruggiero II and of the Empress Costanza his daughter who was the mother of the famous Emperor Frederick II. Legs ~~slightly~~ rich, though under canopies, in arches of porphyry are the tombs of the Emperors Henry VI and Frederick II: fulgor of imperial diadems on Swabian eagles Aragone, Swabian, Norman blood did beat in the bodies now enclosed in the powerful simplicity of the sarcophagi. The splendid epoch of Sicily is in the name and in the glory of his kings and emperors who now sleep their last in the Cathedral. In the short but constructive period of their life Palermo saw splendid churches, majestic palaces rise, victorious armies come back, ambassadors of far away countries humble themselves; Palermo saw the Sicilian poetic school beginning with Frederick

died in 1222 and by her feet was for many centuries a wooden box containing the imperial crown that is kept now in the treasure of the Church. The tomb of Duke Guglielmo, son of Frederick II of Aragon is also in the wall. Under rich canopies supported by pillars streaked with mosaics are the tombs of King Ruggiero II and of the Empress Costance his daughter who was the mother of the famous Emperor Frederick II. Seats ~~luxuriously~~ rich, though under canopies, in arches of porphyry are the tombs of the emperors Henry VI and Frederick II: fulgor of imperial diadems on Swabian eagles. Aragonese, Swabian, Norman blood did beat in the bodies now enclosed in the powerful simplicity of the sarcophagi. The splendid epoch of Sicily is in the name and in the glory of his kings and emperors who now sleep their last in the Cathedral. In the short but constructive period of their life Palermo saw splendid churches, majestic palaces rise, victorious armies come back, ambassadors of far away countries humble themselves; Palermo saw the Sicilian poetic school beginning with Frederick the literary history of Italy. And among the tombs, that of Frederick II, the great Frederick, draws the largest number of reverent visitors. Here is what remains of him who waged ^{upon} war ~~to~~ the Pope, ~~to~~ the Commons, ~~to~~ the Saracens, ^{upon} the feudatories of Italy and Germany: a hard figure when in arms, kind at the Court:

even now, it is made alive, throbbing by the tumult of battles, not only in this Church, in this Palermo from where he started for his ruinous flights, but in Italy, in Germany, in the Levant, wherever there were rebels to submit or laurels to reap.

In 1781 Rosario Gregorio was charged to draw up a report on the royal tombs as it had been necessary ^{to} the to open them owing to the displacements establish ed by Fuga. The eminent Sicilian historian has left us an ~~most~~ accurate and still lively report:

Upon Frederick's body were superposed two other corpses. The one on the ~~left~~ right side was cover ed with a royal mantle and wrapped up in a sewn cloth filled with cotton-wool. Between the cloth the Cappella are over (chapel of the Thrononato) mains of the ancient Cathedral of Palermo before the time when in the same place rose that of Walter Offamilio which is the present Cathedral. The Chapel is without roof, the walls were shot down by the Bourbonic artillery that fired at the garibaldines; the weeds and rubbish give a sense of abandonment as they thrive on an ancient floor of which only few feeble traces remain. Along the left side is the Loggia dell'Incoronata (the Lodge of the Incoronata) whose origin may be traced up to the XII century. At this lodge the Kings of Sicily, as soon as they were crowned, showed themselves to answer the cheers of the crowd. Opposite is the Ospedale per i convalescenti e per i sacerdoti (Hospital for the convalescent and clergymen) remarkable for the stuccoes by Serpotta that are in its Oratorio. The street where are the Loggia and the Ospedale takes its name from Mattia Bonello. An impetuous and dark figure that of Mattia Bonello! But it is well that this street be named after him for the tragic event of which the young Norman knight was the protagonist. On the night of many bon.

the of November 10th 1160, Matteo and other conspirators waited in this place for the High Admiral Maione. As soon as he came out of the Archiepiscopal Palace, they rushed upon him and killed him. A stiletto thrust on the right top side of the gate of the Archiepiscopal Palace, even now, according to tradition, calls to our mind the tragical ambush; may, it is believed that this is that same stiletto by which Bonello himself slew Maione.

It is no use looking into that remote history; it suffices to hint at two figures of women in that seething period of the reign of William the Wicked.

Maione's daughter, first wished for, then neglected by Bonello, and Clemence, illegitimate daughter of King Roger II., Countess of Catania, a new and last love of the Norman knight that became an assassin.
However it may be, it is from here that the revolt of Palermo of 1160 began, a revolt that, owing to the changing vicissitudes of fortune, saw first the King made prisoner of Bonello's partisans, and then, having been delivered, to cause his foolhardy opponent to be caught and blinded.

Many

bon.

In the inner yard of the palace, on the right, is (33) the Museo Diocesano (Diocesan Museum), rich in several works by Gagini. Do not neglect the Hall D. which contains paintings by Luke Giordano, Vasari, Marco del Pino the Siennese, Peter Morelli and others. In the vestibule is a Corinthian capital that seems to have been used by Antonello Gagini as a work-bench.

Several balconies of the Archiepiscopal Palace open on the Corso Vittorio Emanuele. The curious tourist must look, among the support-brackets of one of them the heads by Gagini.

This side of the Palace is on the Piazza Vittoria (Vittoria Square) occupied by the Villa Bonanno, a public garden without enclosure in the midst of which are remains of Roman abodes with floors in mosaic. On the left, on the North-east side of the square rises the Palazzo Sclafani (Sclafani Palace). It is related that Matteo Sclafani has caused this palace to be built to rival with his brother-in-law, Manfred Chiaramonte who had caused the Steri Palace to be built, and that stimulating the artists, mainly

Copy
bon.

With the ancient and (51) succeeded in completing it ^{providing} ³² in only one year, and just in 1330. Now the building is used as barracks. On the entrance, in the Piazzetta S. Giovanni Decollato is a little niche containing the armorial bearings of the Scifamis: two cranes. An object of particular admiration has been in past times the painting Triumph of Death that calls to mind the celebrated one in the cemetery of Pisa. Now, as we have seen, this painting is in the Town-Hall.

The Corso Vittorio Emanuele ends at Porta Nuova (New Gate), in the South-West corner of the square. This gate, that is imposing still now for its grandiosity, was built in 1535 in order that the recollection of the visit of Charles V ^{remained; indeed he} came back from the victorious expedition of Tunis, in which had taken part with him many noble Sicilian knights.

On the South-West side of the Piazza Vittorio ^{Deposito} rises the bulk of the Palazzo Reale (Royal Palace). Opposite this palace is the statue of Philip V Bourbon.

the ancient and (41)

With hasty but precise touches Gregorovius thus describes the Palace in his Promenades through Italy (1855):

This castle, so extraordinarily interesting especially for the Germans, because there spent his poetic youth one of the greatest emperors of Germany, and also interesting for the Italians that considered it as the cradle of their national poetry, rises at the end of a street called Cassero on the square from which one may have a sight of the whole city. As it seems it is the most ancient building in Palermo, even since the rule of the Saracens, the Carthaginians, the Romans, the Goths that established their chief seat. There undoubtedly rose the palace of the Emirs, from whom the name of Cassero is thought to derive, a name afterwards extended to the whole city and it ended by retaining the name of the principal street. It is believed that the palace has been caused to be built by the Saracen Adelkan. Roger I and his successor caused it to be enlarged; there lived Frederick, Manfred and his successors reducing it into the Chapel.

" - the ancient and (41)

most irregular form of palace and fortress (36) that it has at present.

Paleando thus describes it at the times of William the Wicked: "This marvellous palace is built with stones worked with great care and exquisite art; it is surrounded with solid walls and is full of gold and silver. At the corners two towers rise: the Pisana, which is destined to keep the royal treasures, and the Greek, which overlooks that part of the city called Rhemania. In the midst rises a hall extra-ordinarily decorated, called Soaria, where the King and his confidants meet, in secret sittings, and where the King grants hearings to the Barons to discuss the most important business of the kingdom".

Almost every trace of those ancient buildings has gone lost; the tower of St. Vincenzo only remains, and it must be the most ancient part of the castle, and the famous Cappella Palatina (Palatine Chapel). At the top of the tower rises the Osservatorio (Observatory), from which Father Piazza, on the 1st June 1801, discovered Cerere, the star so named thus being after the name given to it by Galileo.

himself to the ambient and (41 name of the goddess patroness of the island. The inner yard has three orders of porches that surround it; on the first floor is the celebrated Cappella Palatina (Palatine Chapel), one of the finest monuments of the Norman time, caused to be built by King Ruggero (Roger) in 1132 and dedicated to St. Peter. It is joined to the palace and has no true front: its entrance is by a portico supported by eight columns of Egyptian granite with mosaics on the upper part which represent scenes of the Old Testament and the coronation of Ruggero. There is an inscription in Arabian, Greek and Latin which explains that the King had caused a sun-dial to be constructed in the palace with the greatest care. The inscription in Arabian has been thus translated: "His Royal Majesty, the Magnificent and illustrious King Roger, may God protect and eternize Him! gave orders that this instrument might be built to point out the hours in the metropolis of Sicily protected by God, in the year 536." (of the Hegira). When Gregorovius visited Palermo, it was believed

acc. + turned himself to the ambient and (41) where that of the old Arabian-Norman build of Re ving, once a twirled fortress called El (38) and + Halka, existed only the Torre Pisana (Pisan Tower) Bern or of St. Ninfa and the Cappella Palatina. But when the palace, that made part of the properties prod. of the Savoia, ~~had been~~ became dependant ^{on} the the en Board of Education (1921), ~~with~~ the Superintendent golde to the Galleries and Works of Art of Sicily and to that the Monuments of West Sicily were established there, of beo then diligent researches brought to the discovery saries of ambients recorded in history or quite unknown, terno The same may be said of the Political Prisons, sea o whose narrow loopholes looked on to the torrent exquis Kemonia, now disappeared; of the Chamber of the a jewe treasures in the Torre Pisana; whereas some no stical sics came to light in the upper premises, and a and h vault with stalactites, like those of the Zisa ~~an~~ notber ~~was~~ was discovered in the Observatory. In the The q same time the Sala degli Armigeri (the Armiger's mirac Hall) was freed from partitions and masonry. the un But the jewel of the Palace, nay, of the whole Paler ratiom mo is the Cappella Palatina (Palatine Chapel).

41

and ... bound himself to the ambient and to the ... b. will serve.

where, according to the happy expression 39 of René Bazin, all the poetry of the North and the South meet and mix together. Amy Bernard, exalting the peculiar beauty of Palermo, prepares the visitor of the Chapel to the sublime prodigy that waits for him as soon as he has crossed the entrance: Only when you have entered the golden hollow of the Palatine Chapel you will feel that what you had until now thought the last word of beauty in the world, for what refers to no soies - Rome, Venice, Ravenna, and here, in Palermo itself at the Martorana - had to be supersed and discoloured by something rarer, more exquisite, more fantastic, more sumptuous; by a jewel turned into a cathedral, by the ecclesiastical embroidery which has turned into a church and has become crystallized from light to a nother light and from a wonder to another wonder.
The great richness of the shade causes the infinite miracle of the walls and the ceiling to sparkle, and the unexpected gleam and the ~~reverberations~~ reverberations leaping from the clamydes of the saints to the backgrounds of the heavens ing nuously and wonderfully suggested to your ~~dark~~⁴⁰ fascinated look, in the luminous little stones, charm and keep it in a circle of indescribable splendour.

The vestibule is adorned with seven pillars of which six are of Egyptian granite; the modern mosaics that substitute the ancient ones on the wall, take nothing to the beauty of the porch.
When the tourist ~~is~~ is in it, if he is able, as we wish, to catch the incomparable brilliancy of the mosaics without the veil of the devices suggested by the state of war, he has really caught in the shade that the light of the windows forms when reflected on the walls, the secret of this closed beauty of Palermo.

After he may remark that the Chapel is in the shape of a basilica with three naves, that the sactuary rises of three steps, that the eight narrow windows are covered with ~~decorations~~^{Latin and} Greek inscriptions, that the naves are divided by means of columns, that the middle ~~nave~~ nave has a wooden ceiling with stalactites. After having vivas am ~~runner~~ over the mucro-garments, the 41

accustomed himself to the ambient and beginning to ~~these~~ look round, he will perceive in the little chapel, that is only 13 metres wide and 33 metres long, other wonderful things, which, in this place, wonderful by itself, may charm. The same may be said of the ambon supported by columns of the marble candelabrum for the Easter cierge, which ~~is~~ is of the XII century; the same may be said of the firmament of shining stars which constitutes the middle ceiling, and, the monk Filogato exalted it in this same church in the XII century. Everywhere are vitreous or calcareous mosaics, of different epochs, but all wonderful and on a golden background. This gold sparkling will prevent the visitor from distinguishing the more ancient mosaics from the more recent ones; it will accompany him ~~out~~ out of the chapel, in the marble stairs of the palace and causes the magnificent halls of the royal apartments of the upper floor as if they were squalid. Let us visit the hall of the Viceroy, of the Parliament with frescoes by Joseph Velasquez, the Audience Hall, and, at last, the Hall ~~where~~ where even the mucrone-garments, the

111. the superb stretches of plain to the south of King Ruggero in the Torre Pisana (Pisan Tower) that is interesting for mosaics representing hunting scenes: but nowhere will the visitor see again the golden sparkling of the Chapel. If the ~~winter~~ tourist has not neglected to visit the treasure of the Palatine Chapel (constituted mostly of splendid small chests among which the Arabian one, delicately inlaid, is remarkable) it only remains for him to go up to the Astronomical Observatory. The fatigue of the long staircase will be compensated by the panorama that will be offered to his eyes. Numberless visitors have ~~admired~~ beheld from this place the city and the luxuriant Conca d'Oro; but only Joseph Litre, the most celebrated Sicilian demapsychologist, has been able, with the heart of a Sicilian and of an artist together, ~~all~~ to describe the splendid panorama: the blue sea that vanish away in the distance, the stately Arabian and Norman monuments that detach themselves from the other buildings, the crown of the mountains, the rich villas and around them the kitchen-gardens, the

of nature, the superb stretches of plantations orchards, and, above all, the brilliancy of the oranges, the Arabian castle of Favara or Mareddore voluptuously sung by the Mussulman poets, thus concluding: On the right all speaks of the Past, on the left all shines of the Present; down there all is old, here all is new. at every step on that side ~~is~~ is a deep mark of Emirs and of Norman Princes; and every step on this side is a solemn echo of Palermitan noblemen. Where the Arabian Emirs and the Norman Princes chose as their populous sojourn the Palermitan noblemen did not choose to have their villas of the eighteenth century built far their quiet country-stay. Another society, another way of conceiving life: the gentlemen and the gallant little abbés of two centuries ago preferred not to meet the rigid shadows of their conquerors.

But all this is felt and understood by him who knows the local history: he who does not know it, when he looks at the panorama from the Specola (Observatory) he perceives with wonder the beauties of nature, the superb stretches of plantations of oranges and lemons, perhaps he looks up along the mountains to find the way followed by Garibaldi or towards the blue sea that penetrates in the amphitheatre of the gulf, and is satisfied with this miracle of God.

Now, if the tourist desires to conclude with a moment of delicious repose this day dedicated to so many monuments of the first order that have produced in him so many different raptures, he must go to S. Giovanni degli Eremiti (St. John of the Hermits). When out of the Royal Palace, he must turn round the statue of Philip V, ~~and~~ go down the flight of steps, then turn to the right into Via del Bastione and then to the left into Via dei Benedettini: here is the suggestive structure of San Giovanni degli Eremiti with its red little domes that we have seen at S. Cataldo, with plain outside walls, with its eastern aspect to which is added the verdure of the garden.

It is of little importance for the tourist to know that the primitive shape of the Church was an Egyptian cross, that its apses are three, as ~~one very narrow~~ this was of little consequence to an ~~intelligent~~^{intelligent} visitor, a man full of sentiment: A. Dry.

What I liked most, he says, in this corner of Palermo is the cloister, a little mediæval cloister, certainly posterior to the church, but of a delicious privacy and very well preserved. Nothing is changed in this cloister since eight hundred or nine hundred years. The thin columns of matchless gracefulness are those that the hermits of St. John caused to be risen. On the marble benches in the corners of the little cloister, the monks wearing cassocks of coarse gray-coloured cloth have come to sit down and read in the shade the sacred texts, to avoid the rays of the sun that, then as now, peeped into through the embroidery of the little columns and irradiated the ~~back~~^{rosebushes} rosebushes. Mandarines must grow, since the XIII century in the ^{fruits-} beds of the cloister.... Instinctively I expect that under the marble door appears an old monk. I ^{am under} the impression that ~~he~~ he will come to

46 in the midst of this splendid scenery, these delicious perfumes, the good hermits of St. John should think of death without bitter ness and ^{without} desperation. Though separated from the rest of men, they must and could love life, since they had in this cloister a part of what still to-day makes the delight of the inhabitants of Sicily : the sun, the shade, the flowers.

